FPA Australia, a not-for-profit member association is Australia's major technical and educational fire safety organisation. FPA Australia was formed on 1 January 1997 when the members of two former associations, Fire Protection Industry Association Australia (Est. 1926) and the Australian Fire Protection Association (Est. 1960) agreed to amalgamate and form one representative body.

Today FPA Australia plays a pivotal role in providing authoritative advice and information on all aspects of fire safety and emergency management through a range of services to industry, commerce and the community at large. The Association also provides a forum for bringing together practitioners and professionals who deliver a broad range of products and services.

One of FPA Australia's main strengths is its extensive membership base. This diversity provides a wide perspective and enables FPA Australia to reach and represent all sectors of the industry, as well as others with a responsibility for, or interest in protecting the community or workplace environments.

FPA Australia's prime objective is the best possible fire safety for the community. The Association also provides a wide range of services to its members, has a permanently staffed national office, state divisional committees and facilitates a number of technical committees and special interest groups.
